E-POS WEB base

User use LEAF app to order and immediately displayed on the store order page

Use of cloud-based POS platform to provide support for the POS terminals. and use of LEAF beacons to know whether the user is in the store.

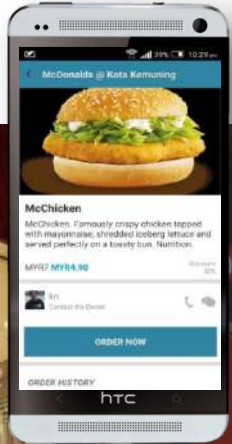

QR code Online shopping

Wherever ecommerce sites venture out into the physical world, they need QR codes as a bridge between the two realms. When estores do this, it's either because they want to promote the site and bring in new users, or because they want to give regular users easier access to their store. Subway stations serve both purposes, which is why we've seen the subway used so often for QR code-based pop-up ecommerce stores.

All it entails is posters emblazoned with product images and QR codes, and then people can snap away as they fill up a virtual shopping basket.

The logo for 'Leaf' is positioned in the top left corner. It features the word 'Leaf' in a sans-serif font, with the 'L' in blue, 'e' in green, 'a' in orange, and 'f' in blue. The background of the entire image is a photograph of a workshop or factory floor. Four tall, black and white kiosk-like machines are lined up on a grey pallet. Each machine has a large vertical touchscreen at the top displaying a food image and a smaller screen or slot at the bottom. A man in a light green shirt is kneeling between the second and third machines, working on them. To the left, there are blue storage bins and a wall-mounted tool rack. To the right, there is a desk with a chair and some equipment. The floor is concrete and the walls are white.
